

EAEA Grundtvig Award 2003

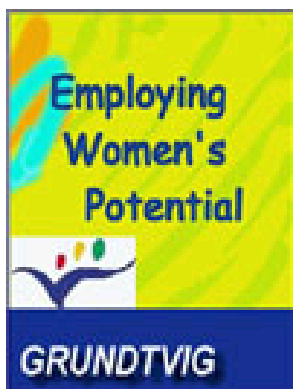

This was called the Grundtvig Award in Adult Education, after NFS Grundtvig, the Danish educator who has been centrally influential in the development of adult education, and non-formal adult education in particular, in Europe and the worldwide. Grundtvig has also provided the adult education sector with a foundational philosophy that underpins much of the work in lifelong learning.

The symbolic significance of Grundtvig's small beginnings and the momentum of the movement in adult education is also central. We hope that this award will be the first of many, which will reach out to every region in Europe, and will inspire the practitioners, providers, participants and all concerned to value their work, and to link more closely with one another. Grundtvig's thinking on the connections between social movements and personal learning is also very important. Grundtvig laid the ground work for the development of centres of learning, in all kinds of contexts, from residential educational institutions to money and agricultural co-operatives. He linked intellectual and cultural growth with group development, a prelude to civic relationships.

Grundtvig's emphasis on the intrinsic value of learning, as a foundation to living useful and enjoyable lives is central to the adult education that EAEA are promoting, with its focus on basic skills, valuing learning and active citizenship. Grundtvig highlighted the connections between the real human lives, as lived in the real world, and the peoples' situations as citizens. This is central to the work of EAEA, and it echoes our contribution to adult education thinking in Europe.

The 2003 Award goes only to one product, but other entries into this competition provided a lot of evidence to show that this is a sector that is lively, vibrant and energising. This sector can reach groups and communities that are marginal, and disadvantaged, and many of the products displayed many inspirational initiatives. It was a very difficult task to select one product, but that is the task we had to undertake.

In order to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of the EAEA in 2003, the first European GRUNDTVIG Award in Adult Education was launched. The first winner, ‘Employing Women's Potential’ received the award at the EAEA General Assembly in Cyprus in November 2003.

Gareth Long, the Project coordinator from Stockport College and Sylwia Knot from the Centre of Continuing Education in Sopot received the award on behalf of the partnership

The project was co-ordinated by Stockport College in the UK and the partners in the project were:

The Centre of Continuing Education in Sopot, Poland
The Association for the Promotion of Women in Romania
Pixel, Italy
Training Initiatives, Ireland
VVS Noord en Oost Nederland
Comune di Firenze, Italy
Centre for Social Solidarity Timis, Romania

Employing Women's Potential a project designed to provide women returners with tools and strategies to overcome barriers to employment and learning, using ODL methodology, tailored materials, action plans and guidance. It is a Grundtvig funded project, with transnational partners from the UK, Poland, Romania, Ireland and Italy. The Award goes to the product which is presented on CD and video. It was selected by EAEA as an excellent example of the work that is occurring in Europe currently, at a time when adult education is reaching more people and making more connections than ever before.

This product provides insight into the lived lives of the participants in this adult education venture. It provides them with the wherewithal to voice their own stories. But, simultaneously, it shows the links between civil society, the work place and the participants learning. This product uses technology in an inviting way, opening access to the life stories of the participants, and showing how adult education can fundamentally change people's lives.

The product is uncomplicated, yet succeeds in conveying a very rich programme. The product portrayed six elements of the project:

- the learning programme,
- the learning support,
- the views of the learners,
- the dissemination,
- the Drama, and
- the future.

Finally, this product gives us the opportunity to listen to many voices, which, in many ways echoes Grundtvig's own words:

I saw life, real human life, as it is lived in this world, and saw at once that to be enlightened, to live a useful and enjoyable human life, most people did not need books at all, but only a genuinely kind heart, sound common sense, a kind good ear, a kind good mouth, and then liveliness to talk with really enlightened people, who would be able to arouse their interest and show them how human life appears when the light shines upon it
(1856 quoted in Borish 1991: 18).

Title Active Citizenship and the Non-formal Adult Education in Europe
Description The project proposes to analyse the competencies connected with the concept of ACTIVE CITIZENSHIP. Such an analysis, will be founded on research as well as good practice in the participating institutions and will result in an official recognition of those competencies, leading to their acceptance as basic values in the present and future democratic society. Non-formal educational institutions, such as folk high schools and associations, make up the ideal framework for the training of these areas, i.e. by combining practice with theory. The second phase of the project will therefore, contain the organisation and implementation of special educational courses and activities focusing on the inclusion and rooting of the concept of citizenship in a local, national and European context respectively. These educational courses shall be applied as a basis for the development of models for subsequent and in-service training of educational staff working with adult students.

Title

Meeting of Generations
Project model for the development of Cross-Generational Computer Training

Description

Has developed and piloted a model of adult and senior education. In a role reversal, young people are given the position of knowledge providers and pass on their experience of new media, particularly computers and the Internet, to the elderly. The generations therefore meet in the context of task-based and practice-oriented courses and can undertake the exchange of media and social competences.

TitleSee for yourself - Contributions to visual literacy*Description

Visual literacy is the ability to recognise images – in its widest sense – as texts and to read them as such. It should be a basic qualification in a world that informs, acts and of course manipulates through images.

See for yourself is a starter training set to be able to read images – with many examples and lots of exercise material – from image grammar to sign language, it comes from the most different observation angles and fields of experience. It is meant to be a school for seeing and as an encouraging assistance to see, to evaluate and to learn to read...
